How octopuses solve problems – the first plan

On Wednesday at 10:45, Ruby arrived at the school kitchen. The group planned to explain the result to the class. The first steps worked well, but the situation changed because the weather changed the original plan. Two pupils suggested different answers. Before choosing, the group checked the available information and spoke to the organiser. It then agreed to choose an indoor activity. As a result, the report included all key facts. Afterwards, Ruby recorded the change and one reason for it. This helped the next group understand both the action and the decision behind it.

How octopuses solve problems – what changed

On Friday at 9:30, Ethan arrived at the town park. The group planned to prepare a short presentation. The first steps worked well, but the situation changed because a key person was absent. Two pupils suggested different answers. Before choosing, the group checked the available information and spoke to the organiser. It then agreed to divide the missing person's task among three pupils. As a result, the activity started safely. Afterwards, Ethan recorded the change and one reason for it. This helped the next group understand both the action and the decision behind it.
