A graphic novel about migration – the first plan

On Friday at 14:00, Sofia arrived at a visitor centre. The group planned to solve a practical task. The first steps worked well, but the situation changed because two groups had different information. Two pupils suggested different answers. Before choosing, the group checked the available information and spoke to the organiser. It then agreed to share the tasks and set a new finishing time. As a result, the group learned from the change. Afterwards, Sofia recorded the change and one reason for it. This helped the next group understand both the action and the decision behind it.

A graphic novel about migration – what changed

On Monday at 12:20, Noah arrived at the railway station. The group planned to explain the result to the class. The first steps worked well, but the situation changed because the instructions were unclear. Two pupils suggested different answers. Before choosing, the group checked the available information and spoke to the organiser. It then agreed to ask the organiser and rewrite the instructions. As a result, the visitors found the correct place. Afterwards, Noah recorded the change and one reason for it. This helped the next group understand both the action and the decision behind it.
